Bibliographical Notes.

In the preparation of this essay, I have been much indebted to the Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan, and especially to the following contributions:

(On the subject of Shinto)

"The Revival of Pure Shinto", by Dr. Forrest Sato, Appendix to Vol. III.

"The Shinto Temples of Ise", by Sato, Vol. II.

"Japanese Funeral Rites", by A. H. Lay, Vol. XIX.

(On the subject of law & custom)

"Note on Land Tenure and Local Institutions in Old Japan", by Dr. B. B. Shinseki, Edited by Prof. J. H. Wigmover, Vol. XIX.

"Materials for the Study of Private Law in Old Japan", by Prof. J. N. Wigmover, Vol. XX, Supplement 1, 2, 3, 5.

(On the Christian Epoch of the 16th & 17th centuries)

"The Church at Yamaguchi from 1566 to 1586", by Dobbs, Vol. VII.

"Revise of the Introduction of Christianity into China and Japan", by J. H. Shipboard, Vol. VII.
"Historical Notes on Nagasaki", by W. A. Wooley, — Vol. IX.

"The Azima Rebellion," by Dr. Geertz, — Vol. IX.

"On Japanese History & Sociology.

"Early Japanese History," by W. G. Aston, — Vol. XVI.

"The Feudal System of Japan under the Tokugawa Shoguns," by J. H. Gubbins, — vol. XV.

The extracts quoted from the Legacy of Tōyō Asa have been taken from the translation made by J. F. Lawder.

On the subject of Japanese psychology, the greatest book ever written either in English or any other language, is Mr. Percival Lowell's "Soul of the Far East". It is significant that the author of "Mars" of this book is the author also of "Mars", the most remarkable book of its kind that has ever appeared. Independently of the hypothesis in either case, the intellectual charm of these two books is incomparable.
