

Then in the ^{violet} heights
Viewing the ^{sublimest} light
That thrills

Thy trembling arm I pressed Fondly : our lips confessed
Love's conquest tender.
God filled the vast sweet night ;
Love filled our hearts ; the light
Of stars made splendor.

Between the earth and sky
Our spirits, rapet on high,
Spoke then together ; -

Infinity's amaze
Sparkled before thy gaze
Across the ether.

in the infinite
Then as thou sawest the height
Seeing the aerial light

Then from the ^{endless} heights
Seeing the milky

Thou sawest the infinite

Wabbling

Thou sawest

as thou sawest the light
Thou ~~did~~ the sudden height
Out of the ether, above thee

Thou sawest "O God of Bliss ! - Behold, this,
Who would not love thee ?

where the Composite Thing which had been the Soul of the Man drifted in darkness which is the shadow of death. In the darkness a light pointed; and the Soul fled to the light, as a moth to flame.

And then appeared another Soul, — so light, so faint, that it seemed a shadow of vapor, — also moving to the light. And the first Soul said to the other.

"How long have you been — here?"

"Not very long," the second replied.

"You are new here."

"Yes," said the first; "but how dare you are!"

"You will soon be dead, too."

Most of us fade out after seven or eight days. . . But you have to be judged first."

"Is this really a judgment?"

"Oh, yes."

"Will I have to wait long?"

"No; the Judge is here now."

"I do not see him — where?"

"Look at me . . ."